He is the best provider.*

- Lebanon has been facing an unprecedented set of crises since 2020. These crises are significantly a heavy cross to bear and have caused a drastic deterioration in the conditions of thousands of the Lebanese families and have rendered them unable to afford and provide the basic needs for their children where, education, sadly tops the list of these needs.
- In this critical time and ambiguous situation, Al-Mabarrat was adamant to continue with its mission and vision of providing education in its schools: academic, vocational, and university for more than twenty thousand (20,000) students (boys and girls), including 4000 orphans, 985 special needs with learning difficulties, 600 deaf, blind, mute, & autistic, and 1000 university students.

- The consequences of the economic crisis exacerbated; the Lebanese currency crashed, and the prices for the basic goods skyrocketed. Consequently, that made the parents unable to afford the basic needs, in addition to the deep devalued salaries and purchase power plummet, which has become a heavy load on them. These harsh conditions have victimized the children who have, as results of that, become highly vulnerable to school or university drop-out.
- Adhering to its mission and being assiduous to provide the needed support for its community and people during these crises, Al-Mabarrat determinedly continued providing the educational duty and service in its schools and university maintaining the same quality that has been given and applied ever since it was established, 45 years ago.
- Being committed to subsidizing the salaries of the employees and teachers, as a crucial act of appreciation and support, to be able to live and afford getting life necessities after the crash of the values of the Lebanese currency.
- According to this bitter reality, Al-Mabarrat innately found itself driven to respond. As it has always done, and be by the side of its people, giving the various kinds of support. To be able to do so, Al-Mabarrat has always depended and appealed to the philanthropists, who are remarkable supportive, collaborative, and magnanimous, and whose role in that process is highly important.
- Recently, Al-Mabarrat is launching an initiative that aims at providing financial aids for students, particularly those who have withdrawn and might withdraw from schools due to the economic hardship, addition to lifting the financial burden off the parents' shoulders.

“The initiative opens the door for donations where philanthropists would donate a yearly amount of three hundred dollars (300$) that goes for school the tuition fees of the student, or any other amount that contributes and serves the same cause; believing that Allah will not suffer the reward of the righteous to perish.

- In this critical time, the donations are the core aspect and factor in the success of the Al-Mabarrat's initiative that would eventually contribute to providing thousands of students with the chance to continue their education. Verily, donation for education is great alms (zakat) and a good deed.
